The Burning of Judas.

It is the custom, says the Bulletin, in some countries during "Holy Week" to burn Judas in effigy. This custom is observed with great emphasis in Mexico and in many of the Latin communities of Central and South America. Judas was a traitor. He betrayed his master with a kiss; received money for his treachery. But, after all, he had the manliness to go and hang himself. This final act ought to be set down in his favor. He was of no further use in the world, and got out of it as quickly and cheaply as possible. Had he lived all men would have despised him. When eight hundred years afterwards, people demonstrate their horror and disgust of this particular act of treachery, the performance might be improved a little to signify utter loathing and disgust of all who betray their masters. For whoever is unfaithful to the trust which has been reposed in him has not only betrayed earthly masters, but he has betrayed the Divine Master. He enjoined perfect honesty, sincerity, truth, faithfulness. No one can be true to his trust who does not observe these obligations.

Whoever fails willfully, would, under the same circumstances, have betrayed the Master, as Judas betrayed Him. The descendants of Judas are many. The line will never run out. The individual who in a fiduciary capacity takes money which does not belong to him is the modern Judas. He betrays the Master. The man who falsifies accounts is another. He who deceives his friends—is untrue to them, who sacrifices them for some immediate interest, is the legitimate descendant of Judas. He not only ought to be burned in effigy as a traitor, but he cannot do a better thing for society than to follow the example of his progenitor and go out and hang himself. All the embezzlers, swindlers, cheats—men who are one thing to day and another to-morrow; who cannot be trusted in business or friendship; who would betray the best friend under heaven, and the Divine Master himself if opportunity occurred, should be included in the same expression of horror as is expressed in this typical burning of Judas.

If only the custom should come to have this broader meaning, it might be well to observe it with great emphasis once a year. Let Judas be burned without fail. But do not shut out the fact that Judas means as well as every double-faced individual, every one who betrays a trust of whatever nature. For aught that can be said to the contrary, Judas stands as well in the estimation of Christ as any one of that treacherous, deceitful and lying crew who have betrayed Him many times by betraying earthly trusts. For he said with reference to the gift of a cup of cold water: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto me." Inasmuch, therefore, as a betrayal of trust was committed against the least of individuals, it was a betrayal of Him. There ought to be this broader significance of the burning of Judas. It may be impossible to burn out all the embezzlers, cheats, scoundrels, knaves and those who in confidential relations betray the most sacred trusts. But it would be quite in order to have a typical burning once a year, with strong inducements for all that class to go out and hang themselves, because society has no further use for them. Judas survives in a very numerous progeny. It may be hard to rid the world of them. But the world should finally come to hold them in the same estimation as a considerable part of it now holds the memory of Judas, his descendants would do far less harm in the world than they are doing now. Let the fire kindled for Judas be hot enough to make it uncomfortable for his descendants.

THE three Georgia pine trees under which Jeff Davis surrendered nearly eighteen years ago were recently struck by lightning and shivered to splinters.

POOR dear Arthur, our over-worked president, is seeking relaxation amid the orange groves of Florida.

We notice in a few of our exchanges where much virtuous indignation is wasted on the Oregon air because Vanderbilt gave a grand ball in New York where all was gas, glass, glare and dazzle, and the lack of intellect was made up by a super-abundance of bulion. There is really no reason to get red in the face recounting the wrongs of the poor, because rich people spend a little money. They help the poor in so doing. There were 1,000 guests at that ball. Each guest spent at least $250 in fixing up. Here is $250,000 spent among sewing girls of New York who are so much better off because of the Vanderbilt's welcome extravagance.

A NEW invention reported from Turin consists in the application of light giving materials to printing ink by which print becomes luminous in the dark, so that in the future it will be possible to read your newspaper at night without the assistance of a candle, pine-knot, gas light, lamp or other customary expedient. It may be well to likewise observe that THE WEEKLY ASTORIAN, the best local newspaper in the Northwest is furnished for two dollars per annum, in advance, postage prepaid.

A LONDON dispatch says: Interest in the nitro-glycerine discoveries continues to grow, and the excitement is intense. The papers are making the most of their opportunity and are selling frequent editions, with headings "A plot to blow up London." The contents—editorial and local news—seek to connect the four dynamite prisoners with the advice given by O'Donovan Rossa to Irishmen, to burn everything English except their coal.
